

Dear Store Manager:

Mark's, Sports Experts, and Sport Chek (all owned by Canadian Tire) continue to operate in the dark when it comes to their global supply chain for clothing. They do not disclose the names and addresses of factories they source their garments from. That means human rights watch dogs and labour advocates can't independently verify that garments sold under Canadian Tire's private labels are manufactured in factories that are safe and where workers rights are respected, and can't ask Canadian Tire for corrective action in specific factories when problems arise.

Last year Canadian Tire reported that it sourced from 67 factories in Bangladesh, but didn't say which factories.

Attached to this letter is a list of 67 factories randomly selected from the list of factories in Bangladesh that have been inspected for safety by the Alliance for Worker Safety, of which Canadian Tire is a member.

Could you please tell us if these are the 67 factories that are part of your global supply chain, or identify which of them is?

Better yet, please follow the lead of other leading global retailers and institute public reporting of all factories you do use in Bangladesh and around the world.

We are asking you to publicly disclose the names and addresses of all the factories you source your garments from.

We want to be sure that workers employed in your global supply chain are:

- treated fairly and with respect at work
- paid a living wage
- able to exercise their rights to form unions and bargain collectively
- work in safe factories.

Operating with transparency in the supply chain is essential for leading retailers that want to fulfill their obligations to respect human rights.

Sincerely yours,

Are these the 67 factories in Bangladesh that make clothes for Mark's, Sports Experts and Sport Chek?
